

HONORS PROGRAM (HON)

HON 101 Financial Accounting

HON 103 Human Learning

HON 111 Early Literary Traditions

This course introduces students to college writing and selectively surveys diverse literatures before 1700 CE. Students read works from the ancient, medieval, and early modern periods of Western literature, along with works from alternative cultural traditions. They also reflect critically on the historical constructions of race, ethnicity, and gender. Prerequisite(s): Participation in Honors Program

HON 112 Modern Literary Traditions

This course introduces students to literary analysis and selectively surveys diverse literatures after 1700 CE. Students read works by a diverse company of modern authors, writing in a variety of national and geographic traditions. They also deepen their reflections on the historical constructions of race, ethnicity, and gender. Prerequisite(s): Participation in Honors Program

HON 121 Early Human History

This course provides an introduction to the discipline of history through a survey and comparison of early societies and cultures. It explores the foundations and diverse contexts for the historical, literary, and philosophical achievements distinctive to those periods. Prerequisite(s): Participation in Honors Program

HON 122 Modern Societies and Their Legacies

Continuing the introduction and survey provided in the first semester, this course delves extensively into the nature of the "modern" world, including global trade systems and empires, experiences of and response to colonialism, major wars and other conflicts, ideologies, revolutions, and emerging technological and environmental challenges. Students will also conduct a major historical research project. Prerequisite(s): Participation in Honors Program

HON 131 Early Philosophical Traditions

This course provides an introduction to philosophy through the study of ancient and medieval philosophical traditions that broadly explore the question of what it means to live a good life. While it focuses on the ancient Greek conception of the human person and their relation to the gods, the political community, and the natural world, it further considers how these themes, among others, are taken up in ancient Eastern thought, medieval Christian and/or Islamic thought, and/or more contemporary texts. Prerequisite(s): Participation in Honors Program

HON 132 Modern & Contemporary Philosophical Traditions

This course further develops the introduction to philosophy begun in HON 131 through the study of diverse philosophical traditions that both reflect and critique the modern emphasis on the individual and its legacy in contemporary life. It focuses on philosophical analyses of the distinctive human powers and vulnerabilities brought about by the scientific, economic, and political transformations that shaped the modern world. Gender and the Law examines how Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act led to decades of litigation “because of sex,” starting with the first key cases in the early 1970s and tracing many precedent setting cases through the present day. These cases will have three broad themes: sex stereotyping, sexual harassment/retaliation and motherhood/pregnancy. The cases center on the workplace and were ultimately decided by the U.S. Supreme Court. A sociological lens will be used to put these cases in context of U.S. culture.
