This course is designed for students who wish to learn the knowledge, tools, and strategies that are essential for success in college and in life. It combines readings, research, assessments, reflection activities, and video presentations by experts on topics that will help students develop success skills. Students will also create individualized strategic plans that will enable them to more readily achieve their goals and aspirations both in college and after graduation. The course will take a multidisciplinary approach with subject matter emphasis in: 1) exploring each student's success identity, goals, and motivations, 2) developing the habits and the mindset that lead to academic and personal success, 3) learning skills for becoming self-directed, life-long learners, 4) achieving career readiness and employability skills. Finally, students will learn about the range of University support systems and tools available for academic achievement. If you are serious about getting the most out of your college experience and learning the success skills that will serve you after graduation, then this is the right course for you.

INST 233 Autism: A Family Focus

This course is cross-listed with EDC 233. As the diagnosis rate for Autism escalates, it becomes apparent that the disorder presents unique challenges for the autistic individual, for those persons who are close to the autistic individual, and for the larger society. This course will take a multidisciplinary perspective to explore these topics, using Psychology and Education as a conceptual framework. We use a focus on the family as the central theme around which the course is constellated. A unique aspect of this course is the adoption of a family with an Autism Spectrum Disorder member by each student; communication with the family continues throughout the semester and is an integral part of assessment.
